“ One of Dad's favorite sayings when I was growing up was, "We're burning daylight!". He was not a man of patience when we were running late. But he borrowed that saying from one of his hero's John Wayne. He loved his John Wayne cowboy movies.

My dad never passed a person in need in his life. He stopped to help, at whatever cost to himself, to give a hand up to anyone. He never took anything in return when it was offered. Told them to just do the same when they had the chance and moved on.

He taught me the value of hard work, doing whatever it took to get the job done. About responsibility, being fair, and after meeting Judi, the love of his life, he taught me how important it was to laugh and love often.

He was from the day I was born my hero and forever will be. I miss you Dad!
